Solar power is rapidly gaining ground as the world’s alternative source of energy. In search of non-polluting alternatives and cost-effective methods of capturing the sun’s powerful rays, scientists and companies are turning to technology to find a solution. An Israeli startup, Utilight, is at the forefront of harvesting sustainable energy. Utilight is using 3D printing methods to create solar cells at faster and cheaper manufacturing rates than conventional solar panels. Utilight’s unique 3D printing technology is efficient for high-volume manufacturing of solar photovoltaic cells. The company says it uses the same or fewer materials compared to conventional printing methods. For more information: <http://www.israelideas.org/#!current/c1gqf>
