INNOVATION UPDATE FROM  ISRAEL IDEAS

A Video Challenge: An Update on The Film "WarGames"

An Israeli video tech company, Interlude, that made a music video for Bob Dylan's "Like a Rolling Stone," is going to Hollywood to apply its technology to another classic. MGM will use Interlude to create an original digital short inspired by MGM's three-time Academy Award-nominated 1983 feature film "WarGames," one of the first movies ever about hacking. In the movie, high school student David Lightman (Matthew Broderick) unintentionally nearly starts World War III after hacking into a top-secret US military computer that is the main instrument of America's nuclear offensive capability. Lightman has to make choices as part of the war game activity to avoid war.

The new "WarGames" digital short will put the decisions in the hands of the audience, presenting viewers with interactive choices that could resolve the international crisis – or bring the world closer to nuclear annihilation.
