INNOVATION UPDATE FROM ISRAEL IDEAS A Technological Personal Assistant You Can Wear On Your Shirt

A new wearable device that will act as a personal assistant without making you look weird is gaining tech fans everywhere. OrCam, the company that harnessed the power of artificial vision to assist people who are visually impaired, introduced MyMe at the International Consumer Electronics Show in January.

Unlike Google Glass, MyMe wearers won't stand out in any unusual way. The new clip-on device looks like a pendant and acts like a personal assistant that will watch the world for you and offer helpful information to use now or later. The device receives, decodes and categorizes video and audio input in real time, like an extension to the wearer's awareness.
