INNOVATION UPDATE FROM

Is This the New Alternative to Botox?

A team of researchers from Tel Aviv University and Harvard Medical School has devised a noninvasive technique that harnesses pulsed electric fields to stimulate new skin tissue. The novel technique, utilizing microsecond-pulsed, high-voltage, non-thermal electric fields, produces rejuvenated skin without scars and may revolutionize the treatment of aging skin and degenerative skin diseases. "Pulsed electrical field technology has many advantages, which have already proved effective — for example, in tumor removal and wound disinfection," said bioengineering expert Alexander Golberg, who led the study on behalf of Tel Aviv University.
