INNOVATION UPDATE FROM ISRAEL IDEAS Israeli Team Develops Intel's 'Fastest-Ever' Processor

The Intel Corp. announced its most advanced, next-level processor with the promise of a double-digit rise in computer performance, longer battery life and better security. The development of this processor, called Kaby Lake, was led by its Israel facility. The challenge of the Israeli team, which led the efforts and worked in collaboration with Intel's other global developers, was to make these processors faster and more energy-efficient and support high-quality video and virtual reality, as required by users today. Israel has traditionally been an important development center for Intel, with local teams coming up with some of the company's most important products – among them the Sandy Bridge and Ivy Bridge processors, and last year's Skylake, which are in many of the computers currently in use.
